Historical Administrative Note:

The Methodist Episcopal movement was started in England by John Wesley in the mid 1700s and found its way to the new colonies after the Revolutionary War. Early members were drawn from the middle class and women exceeded men as many as five to one. In New England, circuit riders, many of whom were laymen, traveled by horseback to preach the gospel and establish churches. Such was the case in the 1790s when Jesse Lee visited Portland and planted the first seeds of Methodism here. Over the life of the Methodist Movement during the next 200 years, there have been a number of divisions and mergers within the Church. Various protestant denominations spun off the Methodism Movement including the Wesleyan Methodist Church, the Methodist Protestant Church and Church of the Nazarene as well as a split of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844 over slavery. In 1939, the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) and Methodist Protestant Churches came together as one. Then in 1968, the Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren Church merged to become the United Methodist Church.

The Chestnut Street Methodist Episcopal Church was formed in 1795 by eleven lay followers of Jesse Lee. The congregation grew from eleven to sixty four in the next few years until finally in 1811 land was purchased on Chestnut Street in Portland and a new church was dedicated on February 17th 1811. The church was not completed until 1819. The Methodist Episcopal movement continued to grow in Portland, New England and across the United States and with it grew the Chestnut Street Church. The first pipe organ in the history of the Methodist movement in all of the United States was installed in the Chestnut Street Church in Portland in 1836 and was controversial to say the least.

The Chestnut Street Methodist Episcopal Church in Portland has been called the 'Mother of Maine Methodism' as a number of offshoot Methodist Churches grew from this parent church between the years 1842 – 1856; these included churches in Harpswell, on Chebeague, Long, and Peaks Islands (1842), Pine Street Church (1843), Cumberland Society (1846), Congress Street Church (1851), and two Italian Methodist Episcopal Churches on Federal Street and Warren Avenue (1856), all in Portland.

A new larger Chestnut Street Methodist Episcopal Church was completed in 1856 with Charles A. Alexander the architect. The Gothic Revival style of the structure was noted to be “the finest church edifice in all of New England.” In 1909 an addition was added to the rear of the church and in 1924 the Chestnut Street Community House was constructed next door to accommodate the church’s growing social and service programs within the community.

The 1900’s found business Portland growing and neighborhoods changing. By the mid to late 1900s the Chestnut Street Methodist Church had re-absorbed the declining congregations from the Pine Street, Congress Street, and the two Italian Methodist Churches, as these properties had to be sold. During the 1970 – 80s the Chestnut Street Church was thriving in membership and activities. The church was placed on the National Registry of Historic Places in 1977 and was also designated a Historic Site of the United Methodist Church. However the 1990s and early 2000s brought declining membership and a building in need of major repairs. By mid 2000s, the Church budget could barely meet the cost of heating the 44 room church, much less make necessary repairs and needed restorations that the historic church building so badly needed. Sadly, the Chestnut Street Methodist Church was decommissioned in 2006 and the building sold.

Methodism lives on in downtown Portland in the form of New Light, a new model of urban Christian ministry, operating in the true Methodist tradition. The small but growing membership meets regularly in what are called LIFE Groups an acronym for Live in Community, Invest in Growth, Find purpose in Life, and Embrace God’s Mission. Community outreach and Christian mission are the hallmarks of this model. New Light operates under the umbrella of HopeGateWay, a street front faith community located on High Street.

Chestnut Street Methodist Church was purchased in 2007, underwent extensive restoration and renovations and was transformed into an upscale urban restaurant called Grace in 2009. The exterior of the old church remains intact; the many stained glass windows on both sides and the front entry of the building remain untouched; the original pews serve as seating in the dining area; the old organ (case), although gutted prior to purchase, serves as a wait staff station, the original pulpit has become the hostess station, and the restaurant’s kitchen is where the altar once stood. This urban restaurant, once the historic Chestnut Street Methodist Church, has been described as a spectacular approach to sustainability.

Administrative Note:

This collection contains records from the early Chestnut Street Methodist Episcopal Church (1795-2006) and the Chestnut Street Community House (1924) as well as materials from the Pine Street Methodist Episcopal Church (1846 - 1939), the Congress Street Methodist Episcopal Church (1851-1973), and the two Italian Methodist Episcopal Churches on Federal Street and Warren Avenue.

Scope and Content:

The collection contains church record ledgers that contain membership, baptism and marriage data dating to the 1840’s, Books of Official Board of Directors/Trustee minutes, financial ledgers and business records, correspondence and receipts, membership rosters and card files, scrapbooks, newspapers and newspaper clippings and some photographs.

Processing note:

The collection has been broadly organized chronologically under the Chestnut Street ME Church and then again under the individual churches that grew out of the Chestnut Street Church. For practicality of retrieval, volumes are numbered consequentially within the collection (and housed together physically)

In Museum: Metal cornerstone box from the Pine Street Methodist Episcopal Church, dating from 1875. This cornerstone box was buried in 1875 when the new Pine Street Methodist Episcopal Church was dedicated. The box was dug up and opened on the 23 October 1939 when the old church property was sold.

The architect for the new church was the Kenway Brothers – a Maine firm that worked both in Portland and the Lewiston area. The church was located at 11 Pine St. in Portland. The building was sold by the leaders of the church and the building demolished around 1939. The site became a gasoline station.

The new building replaced an early church that had been built in 1846, and that was designed by the Portland architect Thomas P. Sparrow – the first, recognized architect in Portland and the design of Mechanics Hall amongst other buildings. A stereoview of the earlier church was placed in the time capsule and can be seen in box 17, folder 6.

The entire contents of the box are listed in Folder 8 of Box 17. Remaining items from the box are noted in Folders 1-7 and 9-10 of Box 17 and also in Box 20 of the collection.
